Hurricane Katrina Relief

PRNewswire-FirstCall
OKLAHOMA CITY

Chesapeake Energy Corporation today announced the donation of $3 million to the American Red Cross and various other relief organizations in response to Hurricane Katrina. Although Chesapeake does not have any drilling or production operations offshore in the Gulf of Mexico or in southern Louisiana or any employees that were directly affected by the hurricane, the company has conducted operations in southern Louisiana in the past and has many energy and financial industry friends in the affected areas.

The donation consists of $1 million by the company and $1 million each by the company's two co-founders, Chief Executive Officer Aubrey K. McClendon and Chief Operating Officer and President Tom L. Ward. In addition, the company has established a funding vehicle with the Red Cross so additional Chesapeake employees have a central agency to which they can direct their personal contributions.

"I'd like to express my deepest heartfelt gratitude for one of Oklahoma's leading companies and to its co-founders, Aubrey McClendon and Tom Ward, for their extraordinary leadership and generosity," said Chief Gary Marrs, Chairman of the Board of the American Red Cross of Central Oklahoma. "There is an urgent need at this time and it is encouraging to see a company such as Chesapeake step forward in a significant way to help fund what will most definitely be an extended and extensive recovery and healing period."
